A Southern gentleman has contributed some funs, made from Confederate currency, to a ladies' fair in Hingham. It is the only way he has been able to raise the wind on them.—[Commercial Bulletin. -Wilson, the celebrated vocalist, was upset one day in his earringe near Edin-burg. This being my first session as your representative in the House, I have devoted myself rather to looking after your immediate laterests than to gladiatorial exhibitions in the political areau, to which course I have been prompted, not only by the usages of the House, but by my own sense of propriety.

I have recently aunonneed myself as a candidate for re-election, since which I have learned, for the first time, through the newspapers, that a convention has been called to assemble at Lagrange, in the county of Ohlham, on the 12th day of August next, to mominate a candidate to represent the district in the 41st Congress.

The gentle undulations and the higher hills, the little slopes that looked down loward the rocky bed where once the rock had flowed, and deeper vales that old of shailes that had been, and that vet would be, before a half a day—all these were tull of beauty still. The curling corn blades, even, had their own sweet, quiet beauty; a soft, pathetle, sleading loveliness that asked the clouds for rain—for just one little shower, a lozen drops—nay, but one, only one brop—that they might live, and thrive, and bless the hand that planted and rulected. And the trees, the dear, lear, generous trees—so full of enderest, sweetest, strangest, beauty—is great sublimity that rose up in the heated country piace, and said to bantished travelers on life's weary way, teart-sick and sad, look ye to us. Consider us and let us help you. Think of its us we are, and let our example be a caide to you. Here we stand amid the meat, the scorching, biazing heat; day after lay the sun darts down his hottest rays, so if he means to wither us root and wanch; but we lift up our heads, and any we will not die; we have a mission in the earth and it must be fulfilled.
